University of Western Ontario researchers are designing user interfaces for a home technology that is meant to help seniors live independently in their own homes, for longer periods of time.

Ethics Review #: 18438E / #18533E

Called Intelligent Senior Independent Living Spaces, this home technology will collect information about the seniors' home environment and help monitor senior's health conditions.

For this study, we are looking for senior residents (65+) and informal care providers*, to help us design the user interfaces for this home technology.

Participants will be compensated for their time on the project.

The home technology will NOT be installed in participants' homes.

*Informal care providers in this project are those who provide or are willing to provide informal care to the senior participants, such as close friends, neighbors, or family members.
